Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

The Lewis County Courthouse is a four-story, flat-roofed, Beaux Arts style building. It is located at 351 Northwest North Street on City Block 18 of Barrett's Addition to the City of Chehalis. The block is 100x200 feet; the building is 90x162 feet. The courthouse is bordered by Main Street on its South side, Chehalis Avenue on its West, North Street to the North, and Pacific Avenue to the East. Originally surrounded by a mix of residential and commercial properties, the courthouse is now surrounded by other county buildings.

Courthouse Exterior

It has a concrete shell, reinforced with steel and is a Class AA structure. Supported by a concrete foundation and piers on which the structural members rest, the outside foundation walls double as walls for the basement level.

All exterior stairs are centered to the building's face and flanked by cast sandstone posts and curving walls. Granite stairs lead up to the main entrances on the north and south sides of the building, and down to the basement entrances on the east and west sides. There are 8 steps to the Main St door, 13 steps to the North St door, 7 steps into the basement from Chehalis Ave, and 10 steps into the basement from Pacific Ave. North and south entrances still have the original massive bronze doors. East and west entrances have been replaced with aluminum-frame doors. The east entrance to the basement has been modified for ADA accessibility with a ramp and power openers on both interior and exterior doors. The roof is flat concrete, originally built up with coal tar and gravel to provide weather tightness. The current roof is a single-ply membrane EPDM roof over insulation. It contains a skylight well that provides light leading to the central staircase on the first floor.

The classical exterior is finished in brick and stone: sandstone. There are four stories, including a daylight basement and three upper floors, with a mezzanine located between the second and third floors of the north side of the building. Pilasters (shaped after the Doric order), cornices, parapet, triglyphs, and rusticated base made of pinkish-grey cast stone. The fourth, or attic story is concealed behind a windowless parapet. A window, or "light well" is hidden behind the parapet to allow some natural light into the jail, but also to prevent escape. Sandstone portrait busts in bas relief of Meriwether Lewis and George Washington are on the east and west sides of the building, respectively. On the north and south sides of the building are inscriptions in Roman lettering: COVRT HOVSE OF THE COVNTY OF LEWIS ERECTED BY THE PEOPLE AND DEDICATED TO THE ADVANCEMENT OF JVSTICE, and LET VS RAISE A STANDARD TO WHICH THE WISE AND HONEST CAN REPAIR. GEORGE WASHINGTON.

The original windows have been replaced with insulated, aluminum-frame, double-pane windows. A total of 79 windows were changed.¹ There are cast stone balustrades, pediments, and sills. Basement level windows are contained in window wells allowing natural light to be extensively utilized.

Courthouse Interior

Each floor of the interior has 14,670 square feet, except the top, which is 10,656 square feet, and the mezzanine floor, which is 2500 square feet. Interior walls are plastering over terra cotta or gypsum stone, with California stucco in the corridors. A sculpted panel of Meriwether Lewis adorns the courthouse corridor. The original mahogany trim is still in place and is carved to duplicate the plaster features. The mahogany benches formerly in the court galleries are now used as waiting benches in the lobby. The flooring in the basement, in the first and second floor public corridors, and in the main stairway is terrazzo with brass divider strips. The pilasters, egg and dart moldings, dentils, window pediments, modillions, finials, and triglyphs used on the exterior are duplicated on interior first and second floors: in halls and rooms, including the second floor courtrooms, and is still present today. The first floor features high ceilings and detailed moldings. The current paint scheme was designed to highlight these details and used period colors. Interior stairs are as follows: 16 steps to the first landing, 16 more steps to the second floor, 30 steps to the jail on the third floor, and two sets of steps to the basement from the first floor. Main stairway in the building's center has a low ceiling between a set of stairs going up and a set going down that features bas relief rosettes. The stairs to the second floor are lit by the previously mentioned skylight.

Original Floor Plans

Included in the basement were quarters for the Agricultural and Horticultural County Agent, Fair Commission, Superintendent of Schools, Fire Warden, County Nurse (Health Dept.), and Game Commission. Basement also contained the Records Storage Vault, the Sheriff's Vault (which included an illicit liquor vault), a boiler room, and a storage area for coal. It also held a Blueprint Room for the Engineer, and locker rooms.

On the first floor: were offices for the Engineer, Auditor, the County Commissioners, the Treasurer, and the Assessor. There were men's and women's restrooms, a north and south vestibule, and a large public lobby which included a telephone booth for information. The second floor housed two courtrooms—one 36x50 feet, the other 46x70 feet—each with attached Judges Chambers, the Sheriff's Office, the Prosecuting Attorney's Office, two attorney rooms, and the County Clerk's office. There were also men's and women's restrooms.

The mezzanine level was attached to the second floor by interior stairwells and contained space for Court Bailiffs, Jury Rooms for the two courtrooms, a Sheriff's Deputies Room, and the Law Library. The windowless third floor (attic) was designed to house the jail. It could be accessed by stairways or by a basement elevator that led directly to the jail. The main cell room was 40x50 feet. The jail equipment used had the most modern features in safety, convenience, and sanitation at the time. There was an operating room, Doctor's Office and Lab, Matron and Jailers quarters, a kitchen, and a Jury Sleeping Room with areas for male and female jurors. Provided were separate cells for men, women, juveniles, and the insane. There was also a solitary confinement cell and a bullpen.

Courthouse Alterations

In 1953, construction began north of the courthouse on an annex designed by Wohleb & Wohleb &

Associates². Dedicated November 19, 1954³, the Health Department and County Extension Office moved there from the courthouse basement to allow other county offices space to expand.

Through the years, Community Development and Planning, Sheriff's Detectives, Assessors Mapping and Appraisers, Parks and Community Services, Facilities Maintenance, Emergency Management, and Central Dispatch have all been housed in the basement. Currently, Risk Management and Human Resources, Fiscal Services, the WSU Extension Office, and Weed Control are located on the basement level. The Records Vault remains virtually unchanged.

The courtroom on the second floor was used for various local magistrates until 1961, when the room was remodeled to house the newly designated District Court and its Clerk. In 1967, the county bricked up four windows on the western face of the building in an effort to drown out train noise.⁴

On September 29, 1973, an arson fire caused over $100,000 damage to the Superior courtroom.⁵

In 1975, Lewis County was granted a second Superior Court Judge position and all District Court functions moved to the Health Building.

In 1977, a second Annex, designed by James H. Hubenthal⁶, was completed south of the courthouse. The Lewis County Extension Service, Weed Control, the Public Works Department all moved out of the courthouse. The Prosecuting Attorney and staff shared the third floor with District Court. The Sheriff's office was on the top floor. A skybridge between the buildings allowed transport of prisoners from the jail to the annex, and for easy movement of officials among offices.⁷ In the courthouse, Superior Court expanded to allow for jury rooms attached to the courtrooms, and the law library moved to the mezzanine. This helped the building get into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The west end room originally used for District Court was split in the mid-1960s. The front area became a second superior courtroom, and the rear third served as district court until 1977 when the court moved to the annex. This project restored the courtroom to its original size.⁸

In 1986, the county constructed a new jail next to the Law & Justice Center on Chehalis Avenue. At that time, the third floor became home to the Printing Office, functions of the Sheriff's Office—D.A.R.E., the Drug Task Force, Evidence Storage—and storage for the Clerk's Office.

A 1990 project to steam-clean and restore the exterior masonry; also to repair the steps was expected to take about two months.⁹ In 1993, the second floor of the courthouse was renovated to add a third courtroom and a Court Administrator's Office.

Between 1995 and 2003, the historic courthouse received $3 million in upgrades in a massive project that eventually consolidated all the courts, the jail, the Sheriff's office and the Prosecutor's office into the 1977 Annex.¹⁰ All of the county administration offices consolidated into the historic courthouse. The courthouse's interior offices were remodeled and a new public elevator installed, its exterior façade was cleaned and restored, and the skybridge was removed in 2002 returning the building to its historic exterior specifications.¹¹

The courthouse itself had its antiquated electrical service replaced, and new heating and ventilation systems installed.¹² It was also wired for computer networking. No master plans exist for this project due to its many phases that seemed to grow from each other; what began as a simple paint job snowballed. Plans dated 1992 were drawn by James H. Hubenthal who also designed the 1977 annex. The process began in 1995 with County Treasurer Rose Bowman and a citizen committee who wanted to put in better lighting and to cover the interior's mustard-yellow paint. That goal turned into a full-blown renovation.¹³ A Courthouse Refurbishment Committee researched historically accurate paint colors and lighting fixtures. They also visited vintage courthouses for ideas. They repainted interior public spaces to accentuate the ornate architectural flourishes, and "to accent the neoclassical architecture of the hallways and courtrooms."¹⁴

In 1995, a portion of the third floor was renovated for a new Dispatch Center, and E911 equipment. At this time, Central Dispatch was moved from the basement. Also in 1995, the county initiated a project to restore the historical aspects of the public interior spaces, including repainting to highlight architectural details and installing period lighting in the corridors.

In 2003, the county completed a major renovation that gave the courthouse its current layout. The Assessor's Office and all commissioners' offices relocated to the Second Floor and replaced the space vacated by the Superior Court and County Clerk. The Superior Courtroom became a public hearings room for the County Commissioners. The Auditor's Office was expanded to occupy the spaces left by the Assessors and Commissioners. The WSU Extension moved back to the basement where the Department of General Administration also located. The sky bridge was removed, and the Annex was renamed The Law and Justice Center.

Since 2003, the only changes to the layout of the building were additional space allocated on the third floor for Central Dispatch, and the creation of an office for the Central Services Director.

In 2007, the county launched a project to restore the exterior of the building to original specifications. Cast sandstone was replaced on the south façade to repair the stone removed to attach the sky bridge and the window sills on the west end Second Floor. At the same time, the county repaired existing cast stone features to correct decades of weather damage, and repointed the brick fields.¹⁵ This project also installed period lighting at the entrances that was shown on the original plans but never installed.

In 2009, the ridge cap was repaired and repainted, and the exterior elevator shaft repaired and sealed.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The Lewis County Courthouse in Chehalis, Washington is historically significant under Criteria A, as a property that is directly associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of the growth, development and industry of Lewis County. The building is also significant under Criteria C, as a good example of its type and as a building that represents the work of a master architect, Jack deForest Griffin.

From 1927 until 1977, the nominated building held district and superior courts, as well as all county functions. Notable for the permanence of its construction, the nominated building was the first major expenditure by the county for a courthouse building. Previous court and commissioner sessions were held in private homes, simple wooden frame buildings, and/or re-purposed structures. The period of significance begins with the year the courthouse was dedicated, 1927, and extends to 1954 the year the Health Department moved to a new across the street symbolizing the beginning of a slow shift in the functions of the building.

Construction of the Lewis County Courthouse began in 1925 and was completed in 1927. The total cost for the building, $425,000, was allocated without a bond, tax increase or debt. Instead a special fund was created by "the slight shaving of road district and other levies over a two-year period." Two separate general contracts were paid to construct the building in two units. The first unit, built by S. Christian Erickson of Tacoma, laid the foundations, built the basement, and provided the concrete and shell of the building. The second unit, which completed the courthouse, was contracted to Settergren Brothers of Portland, Oregon.

Early Lewis County History

At the December 1845 birth of Lewis County, the county seat was wherever the justices of the peace decided to hold court.^{xvi} This lack of defined seat caused considerable grief considering the original area included a vast swath of land stretching to all land west of the Cowlitz River and north to 54 degrees, 40 minutes longitudinal line. Thirteen counties would eventually be carved from Lewis County, known by some as the "Mother of All Counties." The counties included Pacific in 1851, Thurston, King, Jefferson, Pierce, and Island counties followed in 1852. Then between 1854 and 1857, Clallam, Chehalis (renamed Grays Harbor), Cowlitz, Wahkiakum, Whatcom, Swamish (renamed Mason), and Skamania counties were formed. Finally, in 1857, Slaughter (renamed Kitsap) County was carved from King County.^{xvii}

Sidney S. Ford Home

Early on, the first county meetings were held at the home of Sidney Smith Ford on Ford's Prairie. Records indicated that that the site was used as such for a commissioner session on October 4, 1847.^{xviii} Ford and his family had arrived in 1846 and built a two-story home on a 640-acre Donation Land Claim northwest of where the Skookumchuck and Chehalis Rivers meet. Ford was one of the county's first justices of the peace. He and his sons spoke several Indian dialects and served as

John R. Jackson Home

The first court held north of the Columbia River^{xx} was at John Jackson's cabin in 1850.^{xxi} Federal Judge William R. Strong of Oregon presided over the selection of grand and petit jurors in October of 1851 and the County Commissioners also met there.^{xxii xxiii} For several years, court activities alternated between the Ford and Jackson homes.

John Robinson Jackson had arrived in the Lewis River Valley area in 1845, a year before Britain ceded Lewis County to the United States. He became the first landowner in what became Washington Territory, eventually owning over 2,200 acres. After building a log cabin on his claim located 12 miles north of Cowlitz landing and marrying Matilda Koontz, a widow with four sons, the Jackson home served as a way station of sorts for early travelers. Before they were generals, Ulysses S. Grant, George McClellan, and Phillip Sheridan all stayed with the Jacksons.^{xxiv} The community also gathered there for weddings, celebrations, and repair/trade shops for farm implements.^{xxv} Before the Cowlitz Convention, settlers met at Jackson's cabin "to plan an official plea" to Congress for dividing the massive Oregon Territory.^{xxvi}

The earliest minutes of county commissioner sessions complained of the distance and deplorable travel conditions to the meetings; as the men either walked or rode horseback, tempers frequently flared when locations were discussed. Ford's Prairie northwest of future Centralia was too remote for Cowlitz Prairie and Drew's Prairie travelers; Jackson Prairie required Puget Sound delegates to cross the Skookumchuck River and slog through muddy Saundersville. When he learned the 1851 commissioners' hearings would be held at Jackson Prairie instead of the nearby Borst home, Sidney Ford refused to attend, and was fined $10 for contempt. Thurston County was created on January 12, 1852 in part to alleviate some of the transportation problems, as well as the courthouse rivalry.^{xxvii}

Other Court Locations

Some sources note that court was held at Simon Plamondon's cabin at Cowlitz Landing.^{xxviii} Other reports state that John Moore home at Newaukum Prairie served as a courthouse for several sessions. At least one formal record does exist of a meeting on December 1, 1858 at John Moore's home.

Claquato Courthouse

Seeking to end the continued movement of the court location, the territorial legislature passed a bill allocating funds for a permanent home for county in 1862. The site chosen was Claquato, a community that was begun in 1853 by Lewis Hawkins Davis. Davis had filed a 640-acre Donation

Land Claim which encompassed a prominent hill among the rather flat bottom river lands of the central county area. He named the community, Claquato, which means “high place” or “hill” in the Chehalis Indian Language. After building a log home, he set aside land for a church and a cemetery. Davis donated the first run of lumber from his new mill to build the Claquato Church in 1858. Soon, when the military roads were first built through Lewis County, they traversed near Claquato and Davis connected the development with roads from his home to Saundersville, Ford’s Prairie, Napavine, and over Newaukum Hill.^{xxix}

The territorial legislature passed a bill on January 23, 1862, stating that if Davis donated a tract of land 160 x 250 square feet and erected a courthouse, the county seat would be located at Claquato. With lumber cut from Davis’ mill, village carpenter John D. Clinger built the two-story Claquato Courthouse a short distance north of the church. It was completed in time to hold a “Sanitation Ball” to raise funds for the Union Civil War effort on July 4, 1862. While never used for district court, county business was transacted here until 1874 when the county seat moved yet again, this time to Chehalis. After the county moved out, the former courthouse building was used as a school, a Grange hall, and as a cheese factory, before it was demolished in 1888.^{xxx}

Chehalis’ First Courthouse

Spurring the move was the coming of the railroad. The Northern Pacific RR had laid tracks through Chehalis instead of Claquato, and the new town of Chehalis boomed. Once the Northern Pacific Railroad bypassed Claquato, it seemed sensible to move the county seat as well. In 1872, a committee to petition the territorial legislature was formed to canvas the county for signatures. 90% of citizens signed their plea to move the county seat to Chehalis.^{xxxi} On the last day of the session, November 11, 1873, the territorial legislature made Chehalis the Lewis County seat. However, a provision had been inserted into the bill that stated that the county would only pay $1,000 toward building a new courthouse. To make up the difference needed to construct a building, several private citizens including Noah Bosworth, George J. Hogue, John Dobson, J.T Newland, and William West had to sign a bond promising to pay any additional costs. Quickly the committee bought and cleared an acre of land for future use as a county courthouse site, and in spring of 1874, a contract for construction of a new courthouse building was awarded to W.H. Taylor & Sons of Olympia.

The new two-story Chehalis courthouse was finished in June of 1874. Measuring 30 x 46 square feet, the upstairs held the courtroom, and the downstairs contained public offices. The building cost $3000, requiring each of the bondsmen to pay $400 toward the deficit unpaid by the county. On July 4th, the courthouse was dedicated with a public celebration featuring speeches and games. That evening, the courthouse held a ball costing $2.50 per couple. The military band from Fort Vancouver provided the music. On August 1, 1874, the county commissioners moved all of the documents and functions of the county seat to Chehalis.^{xxxii}

This courthouse was used until approximately 1897 when county business outgrew the location. The frame building was sold and moved to the corner of Market and West streets, but burned down years later.^{xxxiii}

Barrett Block Courthouse

The next location of the courthouse was the Barrett Block, built in 1891 by one of Chehalis' early pioneer families, Eliza Saunders. The three story tall brick building with spires on two corners, was one of the most prominent buildings in the community at the time. The upper two floors originally held the Grand Central Hotel; while the ground floor housed a variety of stores, a bank, and a saloon. The county purchased the building for $6,500 dollars and used it as a courthouse until 1927.^{xxxiv xxxv}

However, complaints about the Barrett Block's suitability as a courthouse dominated the newspapers from the time they moved in. By the 1920s, it had already been in public use for over 30 years and accounts note that it was dirty, dusty, and falling apart. The stairways creaked and the structure was inherently unsafe.^{xxxvi} Also of particular concern were the jail facilities. Between 1908 and 1927, in separate instances and using different methods, numerous prisoners successfully escaped from the jail.^{xxxvii} Overcrowded conditions in 1908 led to construction of additional cells.^{xxxviii} However, a carpenter's error led to a six-prisoner escape on March 25, 1908. The Chehalis Bee-Nugget reported on overcrowding (with 18 inmates) and lack of separation among prisoners where "Hardened criminals" mingled with "younger men of more tender conscience."^{xxxix}

By the late teens the County Commissioners began to look at ways to build a new courthouse and started to set aside money for the construction of a grand new courthouse which would meet the needs of the county for the next 100 years.

1927 Lewis County Courthouse

Chehalis was booming by the 1920s. The population had jumped from 1,775 at the turn of the century to 4,507 by 1910. A new brick train depot had recently replaced the original wooden structure, and several new schools had been constructed to house the growing student population.^{xl} New homes filled the surrounding hills of the downtown and brick buildings began to replace the old wooden false front structures in the downtown core.

Construction of the Lewis County Courthouse began in 1925. Built in two phases and taking two years to build, the final construction cost was $425,000. The building was dedicated without a bond issue, tax increase or debt. County Commissioners L.A. Stahl, Henry Rayton, B.H. Stacy were quite proud of the fact that they had created a special construction fund by "the slight shaving of road district and other levies over a two-year period."^{xli}

Two separate general contracts were commissioned for the two units of construction. The first unit, built by S. Christian Erickson of Tacoma, laid the foundations, built the basement, and provided the concrete and shell of the building^{xlii}. The second unit which completed the courthouse was contracted to Settergren Brothers of Portland, Oregon^{xliii}. The project overseen by A.J. Rousch of Seattle^{xliv}.

The June 17, 1927 issue of the Chehalis Bee-Nugget was devoted almost entirely to Lewis County's brand-new courthouse. The front page article made much of its necessity, its construction, and the intention of all involved for the courthouse to house all the county offices for at least the next 100 years.

The Chehalis Bee-Nugget reported that a half-holiday was planned as county mayors and other officials were scheduled to speak at the afternoon festivities. The public was invited to an open house hosted by county officials and a concert by Lewis County Pomona Grange band. The Boy Scout drum and bugle corps introduced the raising of the flag, followed by a general program of speeches. Chehalis played Hoquiam in a Timber League baseball game, and the evening ended with a dance in the courthouse auditorium.^{xliv}

One of the highlights of the courthouse was the jail facilities, built by the Pauly Jail Building Company.^{xlvi} The 1927 courthouse facilities had cells for prisoners of serious versus lesser offenses, and cells for juveniles separate from adults. The former jail had one room for women, while the new jail maintained an entire department for women.

The 1927 courthouse also featured spaces built specifically for the needs of the county offices and their occupants. The room in the Barrett Block courthouse used by the Auditor was a former saloon, and the Treasurer was ensconced in a room built as a bank.^{xlvii} The architect's floor plans for the 1927 building detail the many rooms and areas made available for the current county offices and for further expansion.

To design 1927's courthouse building, Lewis County hired local architect Jack DeForest Griffin. Born in California on January 7, 1892, DeForest moved to Seattle and joined architectural firm Hewitt-Lea-Funck after graduating from the University of Santa Clara in 1912. In 1916, Griffin formed a partnership with Irwyn Hill and Arnott Woodroofe of Tacoma. When Woodroofe left the firm and moved to Spokane in 1918, architect Ernest T. Mock joined the firm.

Under the name Hill, Mock, & Griffin the firm blossomed. Projects included the Tacoma Can Company (1919); the Charles W. Rhodes House (1919); Roosevelt Elementary School (1921); Temple Beth Israel (1922); the Mueller-Harkins Motor Co. (1924); and Fife Civic Auditorium (1924).

Hill and Mock worked in Tacoma, while Griffin moved to Chehalis to open a satellite office (date unknown). In 1924, Griffin formally left the partnership and opened his own Chehalis-based firm, quickly becoming Lewis County's most prominent architect. He designed many of the area's most important buildings including the St. Helens Theatre (1924); the Moose Lodge (1926); Boone Mortuary (1928); Junior High School (1927); Cascade School (1927); all in Chehalis. Outside of Chehalis projects included the Fairhart Building (1924) in Morton; the Eagles Lodge (1926) in Centralia; Catholic Church (1924) in South Bend; a gymnasium for the Boisfort School District (1924); and St. Rose Catholic School (1927) in Longview. He gained notoriety throughout the Pacific Northwest however with his design for the Lewis County Courthouse (1927).

Seemingly with his career at its highest point, in 1928, Griffin sold his firm to former WSU instructor

Fred G. Rounds, and moved to Hollywood. Reportedly he had designing a home there for his cousin, actress Bebe Daniels, and while working on the project had gaining a large number of additional commissions. The local Chehalis newspaper reported that Griffin had around one million dollars of business on the boards in California by the end of 1929.

Many of Griffin's designs show a strong influence of Spanish Colonial Revival and the Mission Revival Style, most likely as a result of his architectural education in Southern California. His designs also show influences of Beaux Arts and Italian Renaissance Revival architecture, all popular styles in the 1920s. Griffin passed away in Los Angeles, California on April 2, 1951 at the age of 59.

Griffin designed the Lewis County Courthouse in the Beaux Arts architectural style, and the building serves as one of the best example of the style in the state. The Beaux Arts style, named for the premier French school of architecture, the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, was introduced to the United States by American architects who attended the prestigious school in the late nineteenth-century. The style was most often seen in places where turn-of-the-century wealth was concentrated, major urban centers and resort communities. The popularity of this style was advanced by the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893. With its grandiose treatment of classic architectural forms, the Beaux Arts style was seen as an ideal expression of both corporate wealth and civic pride. Buildings of this style are both formal and monumental with abundant and opulent decorative details. The style was especially suited for public buildings designed to deliver a strong symbolic message, such as libraries, museums, court houses, and train stations. Introduced in the late 1880s to holds on into the late 1920s. Privately owned Beaux Arts style mansions are rare in the Pacific Northwest, instead the style was mainly utilized on public and/or institutional buildings.

The Beaux Arts style uses formal symmetry, Italian Renaissance form, and classical Greek and Roman decorative elements like columns, pediments and balustrades to create a grand and imposing architectural statement. Exterior decorative details include may include quoins, balconies, terraces, porches, and porticoes as well as ornamental windows and grand entrances. This style also featured lavish interiors including pilasters, arched openings, elaborate chandeliers, coffered ceilings, or marble fireplaces. The Lewis County Courthouse, completed in 1927, boasts many details of the style and serves as a late example.
