Architectural Work on Exhibit At Henry Gallery

An exhibition of architectural work by Mies Van der Rohe, prepared and circulated by the Museum of Modern Art, New York, opened Thursday at the Henry Gallery, University of Washington.

Van der Rohe is director of the School of Architecture at Illinois Institute of Technology, in Chicago.

This exhibit contains photographic enlargements, renderings, and plans. It traces Van der Rohe's architectural work and furniture design from its European beginning, three decades ago, to his most recent project for the development of a new campus for the Illinois Institute. This project represents one of the largest architectural undertakings in the United States. The exhibit will be open to the public through April 16.
