

The entrance hall of the Doral Eardley home opens into this quarry-tiled garden room, lighted brightly by a broad skylight.

The home's unusual silhouette is achieved by peaks that give height and let light into activity areas. This is the street side of the Inverness house and shows the covered porch. The main entrance is recessed between the garage, left, and the living room, right.

Century 21 Idea House

By MARGERY R. PHILLIPS

THE Doral Eardley home in Northeast Seattle's Inverness was a cooperative effort to achieve an imaginative house that has been called the "Century 21 Idea House." And ideas it has at every turn, as designed by the architectural firm of Bassetti & Morse.

The house has an unusual design, distinctive wood and a zoned plan that is geared for family living, 1963. The unusual design includes five peaked "hats" that protrude above the flat roof and admit light and add a sense of space.

The major zones—living room, family room-kitchen, three bedrooms, three baths and two-car garage—are planned around a T-shaped, quarry-tiled area that serves many purposes.

One leg of the T serves as an entrance hall and access to the living room. The handsome, tiled floor carries on into a skylighted garden room, which opens on one side to an inviting, guest-sized dining room and dining terrace and on the other side to a view deck shared by the living room and master bedroom.

Passageways lead on to the family room, powder room, corridor, laundry, two children's bedrooms, family bath and master suite.

Highlights of the house include great glass areas and skylights letting light into unexpected places, paneling of redwood, walnut, pecan, cherry and bamboo to give a variety of rich and warm backgrounds, distinctive lighting fixtures and tiled, carpeted and parquet-style floors, brightened with area rugs.

On the south side of the house a terrace is outside the family room-kitchen. The covered porch on the left extends past the family room to the bedroom core. In the foreground is a garden lantern.

During the day the living room gains light and view through the window walls. The redwood ceiling rises in a pyramid shape, adding dimension.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST LIVING CONTINUED

The garden room of the Eardley home extends into an area used for dining. Double doors open onto a covered porch and the paved patio beyond is used for outdoor dining. Handsome lights above the buffet are brass and have globes of smoky glass.

A closer view of the smartly styled fireplace in the living room shows the angles of the wall, brick and quarry-tiled hearth.
